

Unsalty Christians (Part 1)

Jesus calls Christians “salt” and “light.” There’s nothing negotiable about it. If we are truly children of God, then we are, by our position in Christ, salt and light in the world. That will never change. Jesus is obviously speaking to believers, for unbelievers are never referred to as salt or light. Indeed, unbelievers are “darkness” (Eph. 5:8).

Ye are the salt of the earth ... Ye are the light of the world (Matthew 5:13-14).

The problem is that many Christians become “unsalty” and hide their light. Yet they never cease to be saved. I would allege they have become carnal in some degree.

Three Spiritual States

Before exploring the consequences of unsaltiness, it will be helpful to review the three spiritual states in 1 Corinthians 2. Every person on earth can be categorized as either (1) natural, (2) spiritual, or (3) carnal.

Natural

But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned (1 Cor. 2:14).

The natural man is a lost person. The Greek word translated “natural” is ψυχικὸς (psuchikos), which comes from ψυχή (psuche) – or soul. The lost man lives according to the dictates of his soul, not his spirit. The soul is the realm of the mind, will, and emotions.

Because the natural man’s spirit is dead in trespasses and sins, he cannot receive the things of God’s Spirit. Anything of a spiritual nature is foolishness to an unregenerated spirit. So he lives according to what he rationalizes is best for him and/or what he desires to do and/or what he feels like doing. He has no regard for God.

Spiritual

But he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man (1 Cor. 2:15).

In contradistinction to the natural man is the spiritual man. The Greek word translated “spiritual” is πνευματικός (pneumatikos), which comes from πνεῦμα (pneuma)—or spirit.

This person's spirit has been regenerated, and he is living by taking his marching orders from the Holy Spirit, not merely from his own thoughts or feelings or volition. The evidence that he is spiritual is that he is discerning, and others cannot figure him out. He is an anomaly in culture, for he has the mind of Christ (1 Cor. 2:16), not merely in a positional sense, but practically. He thinks as Jesus thinks.

Carnal

And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men (1 Cor. 3:1-3).

Were these people saved? Yes, for Paul refers to them as "brethren." Yet he labels them "carnal." What characterizes carnality? First, spiritual immaturity. Carnal Christians are like babes in Christ, even if they have been saved for decades. They have not grown as Christians should, but remain feeding on the milk of the Word, not meat.

What a shameful condition! When the preacher goes on to heavier things, they yawn and zone out; the content goes over their head or in one ear and out the other. Worse yet, they get angry and divisive over truth.

The second characteristic of carnal Christians is self-focus. Indeed, the Greek word translated "carnal" is σαρκικός (sarkikos), which means fleshly. They live according to the flesh, not according to the Spirit. They are full of envy and strife and division. They "walk as men" (i.e., unsaved men).

Incidentally, flesh is not the equivalent of body. If it were, then we might be tempted to punish the body, as if it were bad. Rather, flesh is the collusion of soul and body to pursue behavior that displeases God. On the contrary, a spiritual man cooperates with the Holy Spirit, bringing soul and body into conformity to the will of Christ. Christians are either Spirit-controlled (spiritual) or flesh-controlled (carnal).

The Danger of Denying the Possibility of a Carnal State

A dear pastor friend of mine said to me, "I believe eighty percent of the people in our independent, fundamental congregations are unsaved." Surprised, I replied, "I don't agree. I believe eighty percent of the people in our independent, fundamental congregations are carnal."

I believe there is a grave danger in declaring those who don't live as they ought "unsaved." For then we make works an element of salvation.

By the way, it is critically important to distinguish between soul and spirit in one's theology, for God does in the Word (e.g., 1 Thess. 5:23; Heb. 4:12). Those who are of a more reformed theological persuasion often tend to lump soul and spirit together and refer to them collectively as the soul or innermost part of man. Some dispensationalists unwittingly do the same. However, integrating soul and spirit results in making theological and hermeneutical errors.

We know that at salvation, technically speaking, the spirit is the aspect of our being that is saved. It was dead in trespasses and sins, but it is made alive in Christ, as the Holy Spirit regenerates and comes to reside in our spirit. The Holy Spirit bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God (Rom. 8:16). Our spirit has been made completely righteous because of Christ—and there we find our provision for living the Christ life. That is the doctrine of justification and positional sanctification.

But, technically speaking, the soul has not been made righteous, and so we continue to sin. Our soul is being saved, and that is the doctrine of progressive sanctification. Thus Jesus calls us to discipleship. He wants us to choose to lose our soul in this life—that is, to die to self, letting go of the things of this world, so that we might find our soul at the Judgment Seat.

Of course, the body is not saved now. It will die, and so the body will be saved, and that is the doctrine of the redemption of the body.

The spirit has been saved (i.e., justified); the soul is being saved (i.e., progressively sanctified); the body will be saved (i.e., redeemed). Those who merge spirit and soul together are compelled to arrive at an incorrect theological position in order to make sense of the Scriptures. Whenever they see the word “soul” in the Bible they tend to equate it with “spirit”—and vice versa—essentially viewing the terms as interchangeable.

In so doing, they are essentially synthesizing justification and progressive sanctification. Then they are forced to arrive at either an Arminian interpretation of Scripture—which teaches that one can lose his salvation by not living righteously—or a Calvinistic interpretation—which teaches that if one does not live righteously he was never saved in the first place. I believe both of those theological conclusions are errors, not based on the Scriptures, but rather based on a faulty understanding of spirit and soul, which then leads to incorrect hermeneutical conclusions.

Those who do not distinguish between spirit and soul in their theology tend to misinterpret the books of Hebrews, James, and 1 John, for example.

When they see the term “save” or “salvation” or “salvation of the soul” or some other similar reference, they assume it is a soteriological reference (that is, a reference to the Gospel, to justification).

However, when many of those references are interpreted according to a right understanding of spirit and soul, and within context rather than according to one’s theological grid, it becomes clear they are sanctification references (not justification). Instead of one losing one’s salvation (Arminianism) or having never been saved in the first place (Calvinism), a more biblical conclusion is that carnality leads to millennial disinheritance.

A state of carnality—regardless of duration—is a possibility, according to the Scriptures. In an Old Testament sense, think of King Saul, who was saved but carnal. Think of Lot and Solomon, who were saved but carnal. In the New Testament, think of Ananias and Sapphira. God took their lives! Think of Peter who was carnal for a time. Think of Demas who forsook Paul and left the ministry in pursuit of worldliness. Think of those in 1 Cor. 11 who were carnal and partook of the Lord's table unworthily, and God killed them. They were carnal for the rest of their lives!

Now I realize, some readers may get very uncomfortable admitting the possibility of a carnal state. Here's why: they think that admitting to the possibility of an indefinite carnal state for the Christian will lead to shallow professions and profligate living. The result will be that our churches will fill up with people who call themselves Christians but don't act like it. In fact, some may even go so far as to suggest that by teaching the possibility of a carnal state we will actually go so far as to convince unsaved people they are saved, but carnal!

To those charges I respond: Yes, that could be the case and, I fear, is the case in many fundamental, dispensational churches. Because many pastors are not accurately teaching the distinction between soul and spirit, and they are not correctly teaching the doctrines of faith and repentance. They are not teaching the Christ-life, which is the God-given provision for living righteously (Rom. 8:4), and they are not teaching about the importance of preparing for the kingdom, which provides biblical motivation and accountability.

But when spirit-soul-body are accurately distinguished; and faith and repentance are preached biblically, not as mere professionalism ("pray this prayer or walk this aisle and you will be saved"); and the Christ-life is taught as our provision; and accountability is preached—that how we live now will determine whether or not we inherit the millennium—then carnal Christians will either get right with the Lord, or they will duck and run from the pressure.

In other words, when the Scriptures are preached accurately in our churches, then we never need to worry about an epidemic of false professions or perpetually carnal saints. Indeed, we can rest in knowing that the truth of the Word will prevail.

The sad truth is that carnality is a possibility for the Christian, and the duration of carnality is never limited. It is not our place to judge whether one is saved or not; we must continue to preach truth and let the Holy Spirit bring conviction, as needed.

Carnal Christians are not salty, nor do they shine brightly for Jesus.

Their saltiness has been diluted and their light has been hid.

In Part 2 we will explore the dire consequences of carnality in the life of the Christian.

Unsalty Christians (Part 2)

Although Jesus uses the metaphors of “salt” and “light” to refer to the position of all believers, some—by their lifestyle choices—become unsalty and hide their light. In other words, they become carnal. In Part 1 we discussed the possibility of carnality, or fleshliness, in the life of a believer. In this second article we will examine the disastrous consequences of carnality, using the analogy of salt.

Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men (Matthew 5:13-14).

Putting it plainly, carnal Christians are unsalty Christians, and that implies their spiritual condition is useless—“good for nothing”—fit only to be cast out! That is quite strong, but we must remember Who said it.

However, it is important to point out that Jesus is not speaking of the Christian’s spiritual position, for anyone who has been justified in his spirit can never be cast out positionally (John 6:37), for he is a child of God. The born again believer has passed from death unto life and is, therefore, eternally secure. Jesus refers to all Christians as “salt,” despite their spiritual condition.

Nevertheless, Jesus is referring to the spiritual condition, the state of the soul after salvation, which is either spiritual or carnal. Jesus views carnality as ineffectiveness, and that will affect one’s verdict at the Judgment Seat.

Indeed, those children of God that Jesus deems unfaithful at the Judgment Seat will be “cast out” from His millennial presence. Is this any different than Jesus “vomiting” lukewarm Christians out of His mouth (Rev. 3:16)? Presumably, that is just another way of illustrating the negative verdict some will receive at the Judgment Seat. They will receive no reward and will not rule with Him in the Kingdom. Given the seriousness of this prospect, we need to understand and take heed to the “salt” metaphor.

How does salt—sodium chloride—lose its saltiness? The primary way is by becoming diluted in water. The greater the dilution, the more salt loses its saltiness. I am convinced there is a beautiful spiritual illustration in this. When you begin loving the world and the flesh, your fellowship with Christ becomes diluted. Your union or bond with Christ is never broken—that is positional and unconditional—however, your friendship with the world puts you at hostility with God in the realm of fellowship. James 4:4 is an indictment to worldly Christians:

Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God.

When you unite with the world, and begin living for your flesh, you drift away from the Lord, but your relationship with Him is never broken. You always remain a child of God. Yet friendship with the world causes drifting in your relationship with the Lord, and that results in dilution. Befriending the world causes a Christian to lose his savor, his saltiness, with respect to the world.

When salt is diluted, it is not beneficial, and loses its effectiveness. However, when salt is “salty,” it is greatly beneficial. It is the opposite of leaven, which causes fermentation and corruption to other things around it.

We know salt enhances flavor, when added moderately to food, and it is a preservative to keep meat from spoiling. In what sense are Christians the salt of the earth? In the sense that we add flavor to this world—the love of Christ and a Christian worldview. We also serve as a preservative in culture, opposing sin and corruption by the power of the Holy Spirit.

God’s design for us as His children is that we function as salt in this present world. We do that by living the Christ-life—demonstrating His mercy, His justice, His grace, His compassion, His holy hatred of sin, His power and glory, etc., to the world around us.

In the parallel passage in Mark 9:49-50, Jesus adds a peculiar dimension to this matter of a salty life:

For every one shall be salted with fire, and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt. Salt is good: but if the salt have lost his saltness, wherewith will ye season it?

Verse 49 is an obvious reference to the Old Testament sacrificial practice of adding salt to the meat offerings.

And every oblation of thy meat offering shalt thou season with salt; neither shalt thou suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat offering: with all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt (Lev. 2:13).

Salt was considered pleasing to God and was to be offered with all the meat offerings. Leaven, a type of sin, was never to be offered.

Ye shall burn no leaven...in any offering of the Lord made by fire (Lev. 2:11).

By using the metaphor of salt in the context of Mark 9, however, Jesus is demonstrating another application for the New Testament Christian.

You, as a Christian, are to be a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God. When you are a salty Christian, God is pleased. Your holy lifestyle is like salt added to the sacrifice of your life. When you are unsalty, it is as if leaven is at work in your life and you become as leaven in the world, actually promoting the agenda of the evil one.

One day, the soul of every Christian will be “seasoned with salt”—i.e., the salt of fire—at the Judgment Seat. The fire will reveal your works of gold, silver and precious stones, and it will consume your wood, hay and stubble.

In other words, the “salt” (fire) at the Judgment Seat will expose how “salty” your life was while on earth. If deemed “salty” enough by Jesus, you will hear “well done” and be given an inheritance in the millennium. If not, you will hear “thou wicked and slothful servant” and be appointed a portion with the faithless as a mere subject.

Take note of what Jesus thinks about unsalty Christians. He says they have “lost their savour.” In the Greek it is the idea of playing the part of a fool. Christians that have become carnal are living foolishly. According to Jesus, their spiritual condition is good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men.

They are like the five foolish virgins who did not have an extra supply of oil (Matt. 25). Their verdict: “I know you not.”

They are like the invited guest who showed up for the wedding festivities without the appropriate wedding garment (Matt. 22). His verdict: “bind him and cast him into the darkness outside.”

They are like the rich fool who lost everything he gained on earth and had nothing to show at the Judgment Seat (Luke 12). His verdict: “thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee.”

They are like the unprofitable servant who squandered his talents (Matt. 25). His verdict: “thou wicked and slothful servant; take away his reward.”

They are like the unfaithful household servant who was not ready for his Lord’s return (Luke 12). His verdict: “appoint him a portion with the faithless.”

The cause of unsaltiness is contamination—by the world and the flesh—resulting in carnality. The consequence of unsaltiness is quite serious: millennial disinheritance.

May the Lord find us faithful, living as salty saints.
